I went Christmas shopping this weekend and, it was quite successful. I didn't really want to go because I was tired, but it was a lovely day yesterday so I set off hopefully towards the centre of Verona. At first I found it difficult to choose exactly the right present for all my friends, especially my friend Felix, who is very difficult when it comes to presents. He already has everything he wants, and I want to give him something he'll really like. First of all I went to Fnac to look at books and DVDs but I couldn't find anything, particular. Then I decided to look round the Christmas market. I was a bit depressed because I couldn't find anything new or amazing. Most of the stalls seemed to have the same things they'd had last year, and I was lookingfor a particular stall I'd liked last year, but, of course, I couldn't find it! But eventually, after walking round for what seemed like hours, I found some lovely little bowls to give my friend. He loves things for the house, and finally I went back to Fnac and bought a wonderful new computer for myself. So, that is why in the end it was a success.
