

Author's Purpose

What is Author's Purpose?

Most writing is intended to inform or explain, persuade, entertain, or describe. Critical readers can identify the author's reasons for writing text and adjust their reading method to match the author's purpose. When students can identify an author's purpose for writing a text, they are better equipped to evaluate its content as they make inferences and draw conclusions.

Reasons authors write:

- ✓ To tell a story
- ✓ To explain how to do something
- ✓ To persuade someone to believe as they do
- ✓ To describe an object, process or place
- ✓ To express feelings

Definitions of different modes of writing

- Expository and Informational writing: shares information about a topic or explains how to do something
- Descriptive writing: paints a picture in the reader's mind often making use of sensory details (what the writer sees, hears, smells, feels)
- Persuasive writing: states the opinion of the writer and attempts to influence or convince the audience. You might think of persuasive writing as informational writing with an attitude. It is intended to convince the reader that a certain point of view is the right one to have, or that some action should be taken.
- Narrative writing: tells a story. Creative narrative writing has a plot, setting, and characters who have motives for what they do. Good narrative writing also has tension – a problem to be solved or a challenge to overcome. There is a point to the story.
- Nonfictional Narrative writing: is often used to recount a person's life story, important historical events, or news stories. This is really a combination of narrative and informational writing because its purpose is both to tell a story and to provide important facts and details. Examples may include biographies and some memoirs.
- Technical writing: a specialized form of informational writing in which a highly focused topic is explained to a target audience. A successful technical writer must know the topic well enough to explain it to others using the technical vocabulary that is appropriate.

Modes of Writing/Examples

Teaching Author's Purpose:

- ✓ Share and discuss the mode definitions and examples with students.
- ✓ Collect samples of various modes and talk about ways purpose and audience vary from one form of writing to another.
- ✓ Identify samples of writing you read or assess in class by mode – in other words, can you determine the author's purpose? Is it clear whether the author was writing an informational piece, a persuasive argument or story?
- ✓ Talk about how modes often overlap in the best pieces of writing. Chances are that much of the literature you read is a mix of modes. You might identify samples of various modes within a single piece, and talk about how the mix of modes may actually make a piece of writing stronger.
- ✓ Offer students opportunities to try their skills in writing across several kinds of modes.

Author's Purpose In the TEKS

The Student Learning Expectations in the state of Texas and the Austin Independent School District for determining author's purpose are as follows:

Reading/Comprehension of Informational Text/Culture and History

Students analyze, make inferences and draw conclusions about the author's purpose in cultural, historical, and contemporary contexts and provide evidence from the text to support their understanding.

Students in 3 rd grade are expected to:	Students in 4th grade are expected to:	Students in 4th grade are expected to:
12(A) identify the topic and locate the author's stated purposes in writing the text;
12(L1) explain the difference between a stated and an implied purpose for an expository text.	10(A) explain the difference between a stated and an implied purpose for an expository text.	10(A) draw conclusions from the information presented by an author and evaluate how well the author's purpose was achieved.

Vocabulary:

- entertain
- inform/information
- describe/description
- persuade/persuasion
- Explain/explanation
- Narrative/expository

Learning Intentions:

- Look at text features and distinguish between fiction and non-fiction.
- Understand how text features provide information that will help the reader determine author's purpose.
- Be able to consider: If this is a fiction text – “What should I expect in terms of author's purpose (to entertain, for example). If this is a non-fiction text – “What is the author's purpose (to inform or persuade for example).
- Understand how text features and how a text is organized helps a reader determine author's purpose and build comprehension.

These or other short paragraphs can be used to introduce students to a variety of writing purposes. Students can read the paragraph, identify the topic and determine the author's purpose. As students analyze texts, particularly nonfiction, they should have ongoing discussions about the structures of texts and the author's purposes for writing each text.

It was a beautiful morning in Austin, Texas. The sun was just rising in the sky. Juan couldn't wait to find his fishing pole and call his friend Sammy to go fishing. They had a great time on these early morning fishing trips. They took their dogs with them and the dogs would swim in the lake while they fished. It was so funny to watch those dogs paddle around the lake. (to entertain)

Our family stayed in a lodge near the active volcano, Arenal, in Costa Rica. Just after dark, we heard a noise that sounded like very loud thunder. When we looked at the volcano, a big puff of gray smoke came out of the top. Then it looked like bright orange fireworks flying out of the volcano. Streams of orange liquid oozed down the side of the volcano. We knew that must be lava. We could also hear the sound of large boulders rolling down the sides of the mountain. (to describe)

The giant panda is a bear like animal that has thick white fur with black markings on its ears, limbs, shoulders, and around its eyes. The giant panda feeds on bamboo forests at high altitudes in western China. It also eats bulbs, roots, eggs, and some small mammals. The cubs are born in late winter. The giant panda is an endangered species and is protected by the Chinese government. (to inform)

Ongoing: When previewing all texts, skim text features to predict the type of text and the author's purpose. After reading, confirm or adjust prediction and provide justification from text.

Nuestra familia se quedó en un hospedaje cerca del volcán activo, Arenal, en Costa Rica. Justo al oscurecer, escuchamos un ruido que sonó como un trueno muy fuerte. Al ver el volcán, una enorme pluma de humo color gris salió de la parte superior. Luego pareció como si juegos pirotécnicos salían del volcán. Corrientes de líquido color naranja fluían por el costado del volcán. Sabíamos que se trataba de lava. También podíamos escuchar el sonido de grandes rocas que caían por los lados de la montaña. (describir)

El panda gigante es un animal tipo oso que tiene una piel blanca y gruesa con manchas de color negro en las orejas, en las extremidades, hombros y alrededor de los ojos.
