

Q: Did the vase-painting tradition of ancient Greece continue to be strong after the fourth century BC?

A: It is often said that the fourth century BC marks the beginning of a decline in the depiction of representational scenes on ceramic vessels. Figural representation on pottery became less and less common, until it was no longer practiced as an institutionalized form of art in the third century BC.

Tags: Ceramic, Hellenistic Sculpture